by their neighbours. It must be remembered that while the reindeer is not known to the Turks of Tian-Shan and the upper Yenisei, the latter people have several other species of deer, especially the elk (Cervus alces) and the maral (Cervus elephas). The domesticated deer is rare.

Forming a wedge between the Tungusic and the Palaeo-Siberian tribes, the Yakut impose their language, together with many of their customs, on both these groups, as well as on the Russian settlers. In religion they are typical Shamanists.

On meeting a Yakut among the various Mongoloid peoples of the north, one is at once struck with the difference in his physiognomy. His hair and eyes are darker, his nose narrower and better marked, and on the whole he gives the impression of possessing Southern, and one might almost say Semitic, characteristics. And yet he can hardly be suspected of having any Arabic strain.

The Siberian Tatars live chiefly in the Tomsk and Yeniseisk Governments. In the Tomsk Government, 70 per cent. of them do not know any language but their own; the remaining 30 per cent. speak Russian also. In the Yeniseisk Government only 12 per cent. speak the Russian language besides their own.

As to their religion some of them are Mahometans, namely:

1. Tobolsk Tatars and 'Siberian Bokharians' of the Tobolsk district.
2. The Baraba Tatars of the Kainsk district.
3. The Tomsk Tatars of the Mariinsk district.
4. The Kuznietsk Tatars of the Kuznietsk and Barnaul district.

Others[1] are still Shamanists or 'Christian-Shamanists',
